

Richard Boggis-Rolfe

Richard is Chief Executive and Chairman of Odgers Berndtson, the leading executive search firm in the UK and one of the largest in the world. Odgers Berndtson exists to assist clients with key appointments as a trusted advisor. The company works in an unusually wide range of industry sectors and management functions; although the majority of business is with clients in the commercial and financial sectors, Odgers Berndtson have the UK's largest not-for-profit practice which serves clients in central and local Government, health, education and charities. The company operates internationally with a presence in most major markets.

Richard was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge and The London Business School. He served in the Coldstream Guards before joining Russell Reynolds Associates and then Norman Broadbent's parent company, BNB Resources PLC and led its recruitment, advertising and training activities in the UK and internationally.

Richard is Chairman of the National Employer Advisory Board which assists the Ministry of Defence with its relationships with the civilian employers of military reservists. He is a Governor of Westonbirt School, Chairman of the Holfords of Westonbirt Trust and a warden of the Pewterers Company.